Among those who did not rise to defend the venerable onepound note were the chancellor of the exchemier. Nigel Lawson. and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Mr. Lawson announced the decision Monday, saying the use of the long-lasting coins would save the treasury £3 million ($3.75 million) a year. Tuesday, Mrs. Thatcher reallirmed the decision in the face of attacks from all parties in Parliament and the wrath of British shoppers, shopkeepers and newspapers.

The one-pound coin has been in circulation for about 18 months. But with the exception of bankers and bank tellers, who find it easier to count and sort than the crumbled one-pound notes, most Britons view the coin as "the most unpopular money that any government has ever produced," as a Labor member of Parliament, Greville Janner, put it Tuesday.

880 U.K. Miners Return to Work LONDON (AP) - Striking miners battled police Tuesday, but failed to stop nearly 900 more miners from going back to work. At least 40 policemen were injured in the clashes.

The back-to-work cumpaign gathered momentum with promises by the National Coal Board of a £1,400 ($1,764) package of pre-Christman bonuses and wages and with the repeated breakdown of negotiations. Coal board officials said two more mines began producing coal for the first time since the strike was called March 12, bringing to five the number back in production since Monday. They also said the 880 mea who quit the strike Tuesday raised the number of miners who have. returned to work in the last nine days to more than 5,000.

Police reported at least 30 pickets were arrested as officers fought with militants who set fire to barricades and put up sidestreet ambushes in mining villages around Yorkshire, the heartland of the strike.

Sharon's Case Against Magazine Opens

By David Margolick
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — A major U.S. news organization reported on the purported misconduct of a prominent military leader in a far-off, unpopular war. The official said his reputation had been blackened by the charge, which he denied. So he filed a multimillion-dollar libel suit against the media giant in U.S. District Court.

It all sounds like General Wilrail sounds like General William C. Westmoreland's case against CBS. But it describes another, equally explosive legal battle, that began Tuesday six floors up in the federal courthouse in New York City: the libel suit of the courter largel defeates minister Asia former Israeli defense minister Ariel Sharon against Time magazine.

Mr. Sharon, the architect of Israel's war in Lebanon and now minister of industry and commerce, has asserted that he was libeled in 1983 by a Time article suggesting that he condoned, if not directly encouraged, the September 1982 massacre by Christian Phalangists of Palestinians and Lebanese in the Sabra and Chatila refugee camps near

Last year, shortly after the article appeared, Mr. Sharon filed a $50illion lawsuit against Time. He said that not only had he been defamed, but also that to accuse any Jew of mass murder was a "blood libel" against Israel and the Jewish people.

The article, he said, had injured his political career and his good

"I brought it to court because I knew that the day must come and steps must be taken that you will never dare again to libel," Mr. Sharon told lawyers for Time during a deposition. "Not the Jewish people, not Israel, and not me not you and not any other newspa-

Time has called the assertions "an attempt by a foreign politician to justify his conduct of a war by his state and to enhance his political reputation." as well as to "punish criticism of Israel's conduct during the invasion and occupation

Technically, the Sharon litiga-

Sharon discussed the Phalangists' need for revenge after the assassi-nation of the Lebanese presidentelect, Bashir Gemayel? And second, even if the appendix does not so state, is the charge still true?

Not surprisingly, however, given the volatility of the issues and personalities involved in the case, its dimensions have gone well beyond a few discreet legal and factual is-sues. If the Westmoreland case has become a courtroom re-enactment of the Vietnam War, Sharon vs. Time promises to do the same for Israel's war in Lebanon.

Time is represented by Cravath. Swaine & Moore. Cravath is opposed by another of New York's largest law firms, Shea & Gould, and the case involves two of the city's best-known corporate litigators: Thomas D. Barr of Cravath, who successfully defended IBM in its fight against a federal antitrust action, and Milton Gould. They will argue the case before a jury of four men and two women, none of whom is Jewish.

Time's legal fees in the case already exceed $1 million. Mr. Sharon has said he has sold his house in Tel Aviv to pay for legal expenses, although Shea & More than to vindicate his hon-or, Time has said, Mr. Sharon is for a "substantially reduced" fee. Gould says it is representing him

Reagan and the Russians

The word is that President Reagan is being presented an options paper by Secretary of State George Shultz and National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane. It is described as giving the president an orderly basis on which to choose what to emphasize in foreign policy in his second term. The effort is commendable. Events have moved on, and the president cannot just say more of the same. He surely learned the first time around that it is not enough simply to declare good intentions in a dozen policy areas. Choices must be made of where to invest presidential time, energy and commitment. Nuclear nonproliferation, which is one of the second-term options, is a characteristic area, and a vital one, where in the absence of a firm presidential interest matters drift — toward proliferation.

At the same time, Mr. Reagan needs to do more than select large-bore policy options from a paper. On the central issue of foreign policy. Soviet-American relations, he needs to fit means to ends: to decide what particular steps to take and, specifically, to decide who among his lieutenants is to be in charge. Because the plain truth is that Mr. Reagan is currently presiding over an administration immobilized by its internal tensions on all questions of consequence having to do with the Soviet-American strategic balance.

There is talk in some parts of the adminis-tration of naming a "czar" for arms control, presumably meaning someone with the au-thority to cut through departmental and bureaucratic conflicts and make things happen. Mr. Reagan says he contemplates appointment of an arms control "envoy." The secretary of state argues that arms control must be managed "in one place" — the State Depart-ment. All this makes plain that a lot of people, including the president, feel a need for some new arrangement to manage the conflicts on this question in his administration. Its leading figures could agree on a first-term arms buildup but are far from agreement on whether and how to convert rearmament into a more stable disposition between the two great powers.

The urgent question, however, is not organi zational but substantive. What does Ronald Reagan want from the Russians, and with the Russians, in his second term? When he addresses that fundamental question, and only then, it will be easy enough to draw the organizational charts and fill in the boxes. What is hard is deciding to do it.

Who Controls the CIA?

"Neutralizing." it develops, means not murder but only removal from office, and "removal" from the CIA of those who counsel murder in Nicaragua means only a reprimand. In the agency was violating both U.S. and interplainer English, the administration's creative national law. His fears were amply borne out semantics means stonewalling, to impede a vital inquiry into the means, ends and accountability of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Three important questions were raised by the insurgents' manual that came to light a month ago. How could the CIA let its agents adapt a revolutionary tract that violated the president's directive against political assassination? How could it justify any insurgency when the president had vowed that he did not aim to overthrow the Sandinist government? How reliable are the controls over the CIA? On every count the response has been disturbing. The agency was left to examine itself. Summarizing its findings, the White House now insists that the manual although ambiguous here and there, had only "worthy purposes." No matter what gloss is put on words like "neutralize," the primer's unmistakable purpose was to promote the destruction of Nicaragua's leftist regime. Whoever wrote it. and whoever approved it, betrayed the presideni's word and disobeyed Congress.

In December 1982 Congress condemned the use of "military equipment, military training or advice, or other support for military activities ... for the purpose of overthrowing the government of Nicaragua." That resolution rective of interdicting the smuggling of arms accomplish in Central America.

THE NEW YOL

At the time, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, the vice chairman of the ClA oversight committee, voiced fears that last spring when the CIA sponsored the mining of Nicaraguan ports. That in turn moved Congress toward the cutoff of all aid to the "contras" last month. The offending manual, then, was distributed last December in defiance of these bipartisan restrictions. It advises rebels to kidnap, blackmail, recruit criminals and selectively "neutralize" Nicaraguan officials. It cannot be forgiven because the worst pages were ripped out or, as President Reagan says, because "neutralizing" means, "You just say to the fellow who's sitting there in the office, 'You're not in the office anymore." When the manual surfaced in mid-campaign, the White House promised a detailed inquiry by the CIA's inspector general and said that those responsible would be removed. That inquiry now blames "lapses in judgment" requiring some disciplining of five or six second-echelon officials, but no dismissals. In Senator Moynihan's terse judgment, a few sergeants lost weekend privileges for a month. All this puts a new burden on Congress. The whole affair speaks volumes about the administration's disdain for law and even for its own avowed policies. In another time, these became impeachable offenses. For Mr. Reagan to dismiss the controversy about the manual as led to an appropriations amendment clearly much ado about nothing jeopardizes respect confining aid to Nicaraguan rebels to the ob- and bipartisan support for whatever be aims to

A Palestinian Cue to Reagan?

The election of an American president invariably brings forth from the Middle East expressions of hope and warnings of impending doom. Last week was no exception. More worryingly, it also brought again to the surface some of the discredited myths which for too long have surrounded the Arab-Israel conflict. The greatest of these, perpetuated principally by Arab countries, is that a new or re-elected U.S. president will somehow discover the desire or capacity to impose on Israel what they consider to be a just resolution of the Palestinian issue. It has been assumed that this conversion will occur because of the inherent justice of the Arab cause, not because the Arab countries have adopted policies which make an American change of heart more likely.

President Reagan should by now have disabused the Arab countries of that notion. During his first four years Israel has been brought into closer alliance with the United States, occupied another slice of Arab territory in Lebanon and established itself yet more emphatically on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, the home of 1.2 million Palestinians.

The Arab countries have contributed to this disaster by their failure to grasp the opportunities which tend to present themselves in the Middle East in the wake of climactic events. The Israeli invasion of southern Lebanon provided just such a moment by provoking President Reagan into launching his Sept. 1, 1982. peace proposals. Although rejected out of hand by Israel, the proposals did offer a chance for more moderate Arab nations to explore a process which Washington believed could eventually have led to a substantial Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and wish to test the sincerity of the American offer by the refusal of Yasser Arafat to risk a definitive split in the ranks of the PLO.

That split will be confirmed if Mr. Arafat goes ahead with a meeting of the Palestine National Council in the face of bitter opposition from Syria. The importance of the meeting is that it could open the way to productive cooperation between the moderate wing of the PLO. Jordan and Egypt. If they were jointly to express a conditional willingness to involve themselves in a relaunched Reagan plan, it could provide the signal for the United States to be tempted back into the arena. Israel, under its new government, also wants the Americans to become more involved.

Rajiv Gandhi: A Good Start

The impression of indecision that Rajiv Gandhi gave in the first hours after the assassination of Indira Gandhi has been dispelled quickly. Dismissal of high officials in the security services, prosecution of Congress-I activ-ists accused of abetting Hindu assailants in the recent massacres of Sikhs and compensation arrangements for the victims' families have gone down well, even if this is not enough to restore harmony between the two communities. By promptly occupying the great void left by the death of a leader perceived by many Indians as a "mother" and symbol of hope, Rativ Gandhi has shown calmly and with dignity that the succession could be assumed.

If these figures conform to the official count then the victory gained by the Administration in winning two-thirds control of both Houses is not an overwhelming approval of the President's recovery and relief dicies. It is far from the clear-cut mandate the Democrats claim. Last week's vote shows that the Republican Party is far from dead, as Democrats would have the country believe.

Personnel for Four More Years of Foreign Policy

P ARIS - Now foreign leaders are asking where President Reagan wants to take U.S. policy in four more years. There have been important changes in the world since he first moved into the White House. They bring new opportunities for U.S. initiative, new problems and new approaches to old problems. The period between an election and the inauguration should be a time for reviewing what the old assumptions produced and trying to learn some lessons for the future, not just plunging on in the euphoria of landslide. The first clues should come with Mr. Reagan's decisions on cabinet and sub-cabinet appoint-ments. The most troublesome problems in foreign policy during the first term came from the failure to establish disciplined teamwork and from the unending internal tug-of-war that resulted. Strobe Talbott's revealing book. "Deadly Gambits." on the failed U.S.-Soviet missile negotiations recounts in gory detail how the infighting continued even after presidential directives were issued. because they tended to leave vital questions open for interpretation. The book documents a distressing story of non-decision-making, almost but not really echoing the judgment of the cartoon charac-ter Pogo that "We has met the enemy, and it is us." But Mr. Talbott's book is also encouraging, be-cause it makes some conclusions possible about how American leadership can understand and improve its capacity for effective negotiation. It is recommended reading for Mr. Reagan.

The Russian officials will surely have read the book and it should make them wonder about their By Flora Lewis handling of intricate diplomacy. But it will not give them an advantage. Rather, they are at a disadvan-tage because their lack of free comment deprives them of such a rigorous, objective study of their own procedures and mistakes. The key antagonists in the U.S. arms control issue were two assistant secretaries. Richard Burt at State and Richard Perle at Defense. Their bureaucratic feud reflected, and was made possible by, an underlying conflict over the very notion of arms control. It was never settled. As Mr. Talbott comments at one point, "There was no policy."

Whatever Mr. Reagan's personal inclination now — whether for a peacemaker's role in history or for a Gaullist-like legacy of national intransigence — in order to achieve it he needs a team that can agree on a priority and an approach set clearly in his mind, not a Mutt and Jeff act.

The visible strains between the Pentagon and State have been much more complicated than rivalry on two sides of the Potomac and they have covered much more than the arms control issue. It is hard to see how the current cast of players, with shifting alliances to the Joint Chiefs, the arms control agency, the CIA and even Treasury and Commerce on related questions, can ever be brought together in a coherent American purpose.

Nicaragua is another example of befuddlement in the corridors of power. It now appears that the crisis that loomed surprisingly quickly after the election was an attempt to warn Moscow and scare the Sandinists, not a preparation to invade. But to what desired effect? To undermine the Managua government, which has rallied its people, or to push it toward an agreement that Washington now distikes? Here again there are personal quarrels among senior officials scudding on opposite tacks. among senior officials schiding on opposite taxis.

If there is a policy it is to accommodate their contradictions, which may calm Washington but does nothing for Central America.

ca and South America remain troubled areas where events have moved a substantial way since Mr. Reagan entered the White House. All four regions merit another hard look.

And the North-South relation has shifted ground, moving from abrasive ideological showdowns to growing understanding of the need for concrete development programs, especially to pro-duce food. This change offers an important area for newly active U.S. policy.

The people who form and implement it make a big difference. Senator Jesse Helms — re-elected with the undiplomatic endorsement of 22 U.S. ambassadors, while others discreetly refused had a heavy-handed role in vetting Mr. Reagan's first foreign policy team. The president has had time to see who makes the machinery purr, who clogs it and who provokes policy stalemate.

His aims in a second term will begin to show whether his choices now are for records of competence and results or for ideology and skulduspery.

Recalling Indira Gandhi: Whispers to Kyatsandra

L OS ANGELES — It was a cool evening in early 1978. The sky was clear and a gentle breeze blew in from the Western Ghats. It was the best time of the year to be in my hometown of Turnkur on the Deccan plateau. 40 miles west of Bangalore in the state of Karnataka. It also was an unusual time in an unusual political year in India. The Congress Party, which had ruled the state since 1947, had just split in two, one side supporting Indira Gandhi and the other opposing her. She had lost the previous elections and was out of power. The ruling Janata Party was doing everything it could to end her career.

In the legislative district of Turnkur, the situation was also rough. The previous Legislative Assembly, and most of the local political bosses, had left Congress and joined the opposition. Janata was mounting a strong campaign. I was the Congress-I candidate for the assembly against 11 other candidates.

It was an unusual day in Tumkur because Indira Gandhi was to campaign in that district. The dusty cart roads linking the villages were lined with people expecting her darshan. There were farmers, their dhotis soiled from the day's work in the fields; old women, their furrowed faces as ageiess as India: even children waiting on the dirt roads.

By Nazeer Ahmed

Mrs. Gandhi was understandably cultivated it. She had instituted a pension plan for the aged. She had given the poor a stake in the process by forging an electoral alliance of farmers, untouchables, shepherds, tobacco workers and Moslems the people lining the streets to catch a glimpse of their benefactor. She was to cover more than 100 miles by car that day, an astronomical distance considering that it meant campaigning in about as many remote villages. At each she would stop, wade through the waiting throngs, mount a dais specially erected for her and make a brief speech. It did not matter that she spoke in Hindi, which the villagers did not understand. It was sufficient that they saw and heard her. One of the larger villages where she was to speak was Urudgere. The plan was for her to be there by 8 p.m., but everyone knew it would be much later. People started arriving in the late afternoon. In the timeless environs of rural India waiting was no problem. Sweets vendors and tea stalls did a brisk business; movie songs blared out of loudspeakers

The crowd waited patiently. It popular in these villages. She had abolished absentee land ownership of policemen signaled her impendand distributed land to those who ing arrival. The atmosphere was electric: Shouts of "Indira Gandhi. zindabad" (Long live Indira Gandhi) rent the air. An old convertible inched its way through the crowd. A frail lady stood up in the car with folded hands. She looked exhausted, and her face was red from the dust. The crowd surged forward.

She said a few words in Hindi. Her voice was hoarse and hardly audible. No one could hear amid the noise and chants. When a group of villagers lunged toward her car speaking Kannada, the local language, she could not understand.
"What is the matter?" she asked.

A villager translated for her: "These people are from Kyatsandra, seven miles from here behind the hills. Several thousand are waiting in that village for your darshan." Kyatsandra was not on the itinerary, but to Mrs. Gandhi it did not matter. She invited one of the villagers into her car, and told the driver to make a detour to Kyatsandra.

As her car lurched off on the bumpy road a few of us followed in a jeep. It was 2 a.m. when she mounted the dais in Kyatsandra step in. Wiping her watering eyes. she whispered as her words were translated into Kannada. The villagers applauded; many wept. That was Indira Gandhi, a leader of the masses. There was a synergism between her and the people. She gave them all she had, and they showered their adulation on her. I met Mrs. Gandhi two more times that year - once when she was campaigning for Parliament and again when she revisited Tum-kur. There a throng of 20,000 people surged toward her podium to get close to her. The podium shook; the atmosphere was tense. The police advised her to cut her speech short and leave. Undaunted, she completed her speech, and even as the podiura shook under her feet she gra-and acknowledged her greeting. Others may have known Indira Gandhi as a world leader, a ruthless tactician, a cool, shy lady. But standing with the masses she was one of them - breathing the same dust, giving of herself to them even as they sustained her in her trials.

WASHINGTON — Most Americans believe they have done their bit for society's losers, who no longer need help. This is certainly understandable. During the last generation extraordinary efforts were made to create opportunities and a new safety net for the poor, and particularly blacks, but it is hard to claim that those efforts were successful. Despite billions of deilars spent and sweeping new laws and Supreme Court decisions creating new opportunities, the number of society's losers has declined by only about a fourth in the last quarter century and has risen in the last decade. Poverty was nearly halved between 1960 and 1973: it held steady until 1979 and has risen sharply since — whether or not the value of "noncush benefits" to the poor is considered. America has failed to break the culture of poverty, and for some parts of the population, notably for many blacks. conditions have become worse.

This is a shocking record. A decade ago many specialists were convinced that they would see the poverty rate fall to 5 or 6 percent by the mid-1980s. Apparently, no one predicted the dramatic movement in the opposite direction. Now we seem to have lost control of the problem.

Speaking of the recovery, in recent congressional testimony, economist. Jack Kemp, the New York Republi-Peter Gottschalk of the Brookings can, has said often that conservatives Institution said: "There was a rising tide, but it did not tift all boats equally." He attributed this to two factors. as the better-off. all groups proportionally. Second, demographic changes, particularly the increase in the number of households headed by women, have increased poverty regardless of the economy's performance. (Nearly half the officially poor Americans live in families headed by women; 35.7 percent of all families headed by women live in poverty.) Mr. Gottschalk predicts that the poverty rate will fall by perhaps one percentage point when the 1984 figures are released, and maybe half a point more if there are two more years of economic growth. So a four-year Reagan boom will only bring the poverty rate back to its 1980 level. This suggests an indefinite prolon-gation of economic hardship for more than 30 million American citizens. The suffering of a substantial minority of Americans remains a permanent, if generally unmentioned. feature of the American dream. Some conservatives have acknowledged the need to reach out to the poor and the blacks to validate the conservative vision of a better America for all its citizens. Representative will not be able to claim success until their policies benefit the poor as well "There is a river, a wide Mississipp ncher Americans from the subse- that separates the majority of black quent recovery. the conservative movement or the Reagan administration. Senator Jesse Helms ran successfully for re-election in North Carolina with a blatantly racist appeal to white voters. President Reagan himself took some giant steps backward in race relations during the campaign, denouncing school busing in one community (Charlotte, North Carolina) where it has demonstrably worked, to the pride of the local community, and telling an audience in Macon, Georgia, that "the South will rise again!" — a rallying cry of segregationists in an earlier era.

This has been a bad year for blacks. Their candidates fared poorly, and they saw an alarming revival of race politics in the South. They rallied around Jesse Jackson's candidacy, only to be told - by white politicians and by poll results — that he gravely hurt the Democratic cause. Mr. Jackson raised black hopes and the electorate dashed them.

Of America's 28 million blacks, 35.7 percent live in poverty. Of black families headed by women, 56.1 percent are officially poor. Of the na-tion's black children, 46.3 percent nearly half — are in poverty.

What are Americans going to do about this appalling situation? Encourage more growth, period. That, at least, is the increasingly fashionable answer — even if growth alone is insufficient to solve this problem. Bleeding hearts have gone out of style. Who said life was fair? A national preoccupation with money and wealth is as old as the republic. Social critics may denounce present greed and selfishness, yet in truth history is full of both.

But there is more than that in the past. In his great acceptance speech at the 1952 Democratic convention, Adlai Stevenson listed "materialism" among the country's ills. That, and not the Jerry Falwell version, is the Christian strain that is strongest in American history. We may be greedy and selfish, but periodically we deal nobly and generously with our less fortunate countrymen. You have to wonder when that spirit will return. Just now it seems overdue.

The new activism among the church's 290 American bishops occurs as the nation's 52 million Catholics, who form its largest religious voting bloc, appear to be re-examining their traditional allegiance to the Democratic Party. In the presidential election on Nov. 6, President Ronald Reagan captured 56 percent of Catholic voters, according to exit polls, compared with the 47 percent in 1980. Governor Mario M. Cuomo of New York clashed publicly with Archbishop O'Connor during the summer after the archbishop de-clared. Mr. Cuomo, who opposes abortion but upholds the 1973 Supreme Court decision allowing it, took the comment

"You have the archbishop of New York saying that no Catholic can vote for" Mayor Edward I. Koch, City Controller Harrison Jay Goldin, City Council President Carol Bellamy, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan or himself, the governor fumed.

Archbishop O'Connor backtracked, contending that he had been "misinterpreted" and was not telling anyone how to vote. In a televised press conference in September, however, he took issue with Ms. Ferraro by name, saying she had mistakenly "given the world to understand that Catholic teaching is divided on the subject

The incidents - and the extensive publicity they received — have caused an uproor in the church. Bishop James W. Malone, head of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, issued a statement three weeks before the election, declaring, "We do not seek the formation of a voting bloc. . . . The content of Catholic teaching leads us to take positions on many public issues; we are not a one-issue church."

Bishop Malone said the bishops "give special emphasis to two issues today. They are the prevention of nuclear war and the protection of unborn human life."

Concerned that the statements by Archbishop O'Connor and Archbishop Law had "confused" Catholics into thinking they should vote on the basis of a politician's stance on abortion alone, 23 bishops, led by Auxiliary Bishop Thomas J. Gumbleton of Detroit, issued a statement declaring themselves "gravely concerned" that abortion was eclipsing "the threat of nuclear warfare" in the campaign.

"The seamless garment seems to protect a lot of liberals who get two out of three," said Mr. Hyde, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. "They're for the liberal welfare agenda, they're against our defense policies, but they never vote with us on abortion."

Many Catholic Democrats in politics do not support the church's position on abortion, he said, because, "to be an upwardly mobile Democrat today, you have to be very liberal. To be a good liberal, you have to be a feminist. To be a feminist, you have to support abortion."

Catholic bishops in the United States have een more outspoken than their colleagues in Western Europe. No European church document took a sharply critical position against its national government's policies, as did the U.S. bishops' pastoral letter on nuclear arms, Indeed, bishops in a letter last November declared that nuclear deterrence was legitimate because of the "aggressive and do minating character of Marxist-Leninist ideology." U.S. bishops, however, assert that their pas-torals are in the mainstream of Catholic thought. While the church has been active in opposing the Reagan administration's military intervention in Central America, and the new economic letter calls for more attention to the Third World, there has been no endorsement of liberation theology," which has led some members of the clergy in Latin Arrierica to embrace

The new economic letter draws on the social encyclicals of Popes John XXIII, Paul VI and John Paul II. Indeed, in a visit to Canada last month, John Paul II decried "imperialistic monopolies" and called for a restructuring of the economy "so that humar, needs can be put hefore financial gain."

of King Richard II while the city is in the midst of preparations for the already traditional Passion play. gau, or the Palio at Siena, this tends to overwhelm the entire city, and involves rival guilds in huge outlays of expense and energy as they stage something halfway between a pag-eant and a festival. If you then bring on the king and his train (largely consisting of two queens, his wife and his boyfriend) the scene should be set for some enjoy-able chaos. Amateur theatricals have, as Alan Ayckbourn established in "10 Times Table," always been good for a few unkind laughs, and the life of Richard II, as Shakespeare established in a play of that title, was seldom uninteresting. Yet in taking on the two, Minghella has somewhow delivered neither. We don't get to learn much about Richard beyond his invention of the handkerchief, and we get an only a sketchy idea of what it was like to be a citizen of York in the Passion season.

Bishopric jokes about London being in York with Oxford have been better done elsewhere (notably "Beyond the Fringe") and backstage gags about the running time and a fat leading man seem somehow misplaced when that leading man is having to play Christ on the cross. Cathryn Harrison as Anne of Bohemia, forever condemned to tour England in search of a decent bed and a rather too gay husband, hits just the right air of martyrdom.

Under its new quartet of joint directors (Braham Murray, Greg Hersov, James Maxwell and Cas-

In abandoning traditional Dickensiana (no fog, no streets, no extracts from other plays that the characters visit or perform), the Manchester Company has also abandoned much in the way of style or atmosphere, and we are left with a kind of workshop staging in the round, which seems to have no coherent style or attitude to the original book.

Avril Elgar is, however, an unisnally sprightly Miss Havisham cropping up all over the stage and even descending from the roof to stage-manage the proceedings, and Amanda Donohoe is a gorgeous.

And finally, the Ritz Hotel, which under the elegant new management of Julian Payne is fast becoming one of the best cabaret spots in town, has until the end of this month (on Wednesdays and Fridays only) Liz Robertson doing an intriguing songbook of minor American classics.

Although the selection is not as Broadway-oriented as might have been expected from Mrs. Alan Jay Lerner, she does do the title song from her husband's "Dance a Little Closer," still shamefully unknown over here, and then moves on through echoes of Sondheim to the work of Carly Simon and Gretchen Cryer, American women who write one-act plays disguised as songs. It adds up to an hour of rare lyrical

ANTA CRUZ, California — Jack Conrad knew he was in for trouble when the pickup truck began heading his way.

Mr. Conrad. a 29-year-old drifter from Illinois, backed up defensively. But the truck kept moving slowly forward, cornering the bearded transient against a chain-link fence. Two teen-agers jumped from the truck's cab and pounced on him. "Off the streets, troll," they shouted as they beat him up.
"They were just young kids full of the dickens," Mr. Conrad said last week. "I try to forget about it; then somebody talks about it

The attack on Mr. Conrad on Sept. 6 is one in a rash of recent assaults on transients in this northern California coastal community iong considered a mecca for the countercul ture. The transients have been dubbed "trolls" because they often take refuge under and it all just comes right back."

Violence against the homeless is disturbing in any city, but in Santa Cruz, where back-packs and Birkenstock sandals seem to be standard issue and rainbow window stickers adorn Volkswagen vans, the often brutal assaults seem incongruous.

Nonetheless, the attacks apparently have struck a chord in this resort and university city of 42,000 tucked between Monterey Bay and the redwood-studded bills of the Coastal Range. In September, a downtown clothing store, playing off the success of the movie "Ghostbusters," began printing "Troll Busters" T-shirts with a caricature of a drooling degenerate covered by a red circle and slash. In less than three weeks, the store owner, Ron Trinchero, sold nearly 3,000 of the shirts.

"They sold an awful amount of those shirts," said Peter Carota, director of a local soup kitchen that feeds scores of transients daily. "It means there's other people out in the community with the same strong sentiment against street people. It's almost like it's open warfare now, like it's OK to come out and treat transients like subhumans. It's like hunting season is open."

THERS also point to the shirt sales as a sign that many Santa Cruz residents are fed up with the vagrants, who live in the hills outside town and jam the city's parks and seven-block downtown mall, an open-air stretch of trendy shops, red-tiled walkways and verdant gardens.

"I think the shirts were people's way of making a statement," Mr. Trinchero said. "They're saying they don't like these tran-

City officials do not known how many transients live in Santa Cruz, but most agree that they number in the hundreds. They are drawn by the area's temperate climate, ex-panses of beach front, acres of forest and reputation for being what is known as "mel-

During a two-month period beginning in late July, 19 transients were assaulted, according to police. Law enforcement officials fear that many more incidents have not been reported by vagrants worried about being jailed for past run-ins with the law. With the rainy season setting in, the number of attacks has dwindled in recent weeks, but police fear a renewal of violence. "I've been here 17 years and I've never seen anything like this," said Sergeant Bill Alufti, who has investigated the attacks. "I have no doubt this violence may rear up again." Police Chief Jack Bassett, however, played down the attacks. "The street people are always a major irri-tant to the people of this city," he said.

"We're a small geographic area. You put 100 to 200 hippies in it and you create a problem.

"The air of violence here in Santa Cruz is intense," said Keith McKinney, a 35-year-old drifter. "People aren't acting rationally. They're getting weapons. They don't want to have some kid strum their head."

We're thinking of forming a troll-busters patrol," added a transient who calls himself Dancing Stick. "The basic plan is to set the troll busters up. We'd bait them by having a guy in a sleeping bag or out on the street. When they went for him, we'd come and use their own medicine against them." It is that kind of talk that has police worried. "I don't like what it could bring," Sergeant Aluffi said. "Some of the transients tripping around here are combat veterans. They've taken their lumps this far. A few more lumps to get even with the kids that are doing this wouldn't surprise me."

David Tokor, a transient who says he camps each night with two shotguns, said: "What this all is progressing into is an outsients. They contribute nothing to the com- standing little war. People are really ready to hurt anyone that messes with them."

There are many explanations for the attacks. Mike Rotkin, a lecturer in community studies at the University of California, Santa Cruz, and one of two Socialists elected to the City Council in 1980, contends that the "troll busting" is a sign of the times.

"It's this notion that we've got to stand up and make America strong, the whole Reagan ideology," Mr. Rotkin said. "Adults are saying that something has to be done about the transients, that they've got to be driven out of town. That creates a sort of moral backing for young punks to go out and start bashing

Councilwoman Katy Sears-Williams explains the attacks in Darwinian terms. "We are members of the animal kingdom and it's a reasonable reaction for society to want to rid itself of something that it sees as a real problem, as a real threat." she said "I think the troll busting is a social reaction that we ought to expect. To expect people to say, 'Hey, this is OK,' and keep putting up with these transients would be very unusual."

Residents and city officials seem to agree on one thing: Transients pose problems for city merchants. Shop owners say the vagrants routinely harass women, urinate in planter boxes or on store fronts, eat out of garbage cans, panhandle and generally hurt sales.

They have a right to live, but they don't have a right to mess up the front of my shop," said Sylvia Mason, who runs a clothing store on the downtown mall.

Drugs also have been a problem. Earlier this month, a police narcotics unit raided a city park and arrested 10 persons, including five transients.

Prompted by merchants' complaints, the City Council voted in September to join the university in funding an $11,000 study of the transient problem.

The recent wave of assaults began in De-cember 1983, when three local high school students seriously wounded a San Jose taxi driver in an attack with a homemade bazooka. The teen-agers later told police they "were out hunting trolls," whom they described as "long-haired hippies, Commies and tran-

It was not until last summer, however, that a pattern began to emerge.

The worst incidents were in August. One transient suffered a broken leg evading a truck. A week later, a gang of youths armed with sticks attacked a 19-year-old vagrant from Nebraska while he was in his sleeping bag on a downtown knoll. After beating the man, the group threw him off a 15-foot (4.5meter cliff. The man suffered bruises and

AIRO — Early one morning in June, well before sunrise, Mohammed Fahim was awakened by the telephone. He groped his way through the darkened living room and, picking up the receiver, heard the breathless words: "The Saudis are celebrating!" "Well, they're wrong," replied Mr. Fahim, a grophysicist who is director of the Helwan Observatory outside Cairo. "We've computed it servatory outside Cairo. Mr. Fahim should know. His is the only major observatory in the Arab world. The 30 cientists there are quick to remind visitors that 5,000 years ago, when Europe was populated by primitive tribes. Egyptians were studying the stars and the planets.

UANDA, Angola — It has been nine years since the white settlers who styled this city as Africa's Lisbon abruptly left, abandoning it to revolutionaries who vowed that Luanda would, as the tide of history turned in this region, become Africa's Hanoi.

Today, such dreams lie broken in the desolate streets of Luanda, a city gripped by a continuing agony that contradicts the ideological victory that revolutionaries and liberals hoped for and that conservatives around the world feared.

Instead of being a springboard for revolutionary challenge to white rule in South Africa and pro-Western African regimes on its border, Angola is a nation ravaged by chaos and interna-

Mounds of rotting garbage drape the milelong curb of the bayside promenade that the Portuguese lined with mosaic tile and called the Marginale. Shops and businesses throughout this city of a million people are abandoned, their broken plate-glass windows replaced by boards or simply not replaced at all. At one pharmacy, a single bottle of shampoo sits amid empty shelves, a reminder of the collapse of the consumer economy here.

On an evening cooled by breezes off the Atlantic, trash fires glow along a street that formerly was a principal business artery. Beside a rusted car, a woman and two small children quickly pick through a garbage heap, hurrying to beat the curfew that will begin in a few hours.

Angola today is a severely wounded country struggling to recover, a place where there is nothing to buy and for most people no money to buy it with, a place where jobs and work are therefore largely meaningless and absenteeism the rule. That is what foreign residents repeatedly tell a visitor returning for the first time since colonial rule collapsed in retreat in 1975.

It is, on the surface, as chaotic as the Portuguese administrators and their white American and South African supporters predicted it would be if colonialism was to end and Africans were allowed to rule themselves.

And on the surface, the consequences of letting the final variant of the Nixon Doctrine go down to defeat in Angola appear to be as dire as Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger predicted at the time. Cuban soldiers in trucks and East German security personnel in jeeps bounce through Luanda's dusty streets regularly.

But Angola today is a far more complex historical phenomenon than those simplistic projections had foreseen. Beneath the visible signs of disaster a new spirit of political pragmatism is stirring as the nominally Marxist-Leninist government reacts to the enormous problems it has helped create and others of which it has been the victim.

"The Angolan story is hardly finished, whatever the strategists in Moscow or Washington think and however they may try to impose their designs on reality here," said a diplomatic observer. "The local reality is that Angola is faced with an enormous gamble that will determine not only this government's survival, but also a lot about the future of the conflict between African nationalism and white rule in this reis becoming confident enough to contemplate now. taking the gamble."

"You are going to Angola?" the worldly, upper-class Portuguese matron in Lisbon asked, a look of horror on her face. "But there is nothing to eat there. There is no water. The Cubans run it." Her dismay deepened as she thought about the prospect and she quickly broke off the conversation.

Her warnings, repeated by journalistic col-leagues and others in Lisbon, turned out to be currency to pay for it at Luanda's only comfortable hotel. The hotel, the Presidente, has been open for business only a few months and is now filled with airline crews, returning Portuguese technicians and Western oil executives seeking to get in on new economic opportunities here. But there are no taxis in this town, leaving a visitor to rely on his feet and on the kindness of strangers - anyone with wheels. The only form of public transportation is a small number of buses that reel as hundreds of Angolans pile into

The colonialists here who said white rule would survive and create a thriving, fair society fled in an instant and left behind them a system so fragile and bankrupt it collapsed overnight. The African nations that supported the guerril-las and said independence would right the most elementary wrongs of this society have seen instead a continuing war that is as much tribal as it is political. And the Soviets and Americans who sought to turn it into an ideological battleground now watch the Angolans try to edge crown. Wealth was beginning to pour in from oil, coffee, diamonds and agricultural exports. The beginning of serious revolutionary activity had joited the Portuguese out of 500 years of complacency and exploitation. They were beginning to examine ways of extending privilege beyond the small circle of mixed-race and black Ang-lans they had accepted into the system.

That change had barely begun when radical young Portuguese army officers, weary of colonial warfare, overthrew Lisbon's dictatorship and offered to turn power over to African nationalists in Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Angola. Here, the African nationalist movement was fractured along ideological and tribal lines that quickly drew both superpowers and neighboring South Africa into the struggle for control of Angola.

The outside involvement escalated the conflict. It also helped frighten the Lisbon government and the more than 300,000 white settlers, who had formed the economic and political infrastructure of this country of seven million inhabitants, into pulling out of Angola and rushing home.

The exodus would itself have been sufficient to ensure that the prophecies of collapse and chaos would come true. Left behind in mins was

The 42-year-old president of Angola exudes the determination that has always marked his style, and a confidence that foreigners who watch him closely say is new. Trained as a petroleum engineer in the Soviet Union, Mr. dos Santos has tried cautiously but systematically in his five years to consolidate power in the faction-ridden party that rules Angola. He appears to have applied engineering principles to politics and to have succeeded in a step-by-step isolation of potential rivals within the Popular Movement.

In addition to the combat units deployed in defense positions along the Lubango rail line, a dozen or so Cuban advisers are thought to be stationed with each of the Angolan Army's battalions and to have been instrumental in organizing and training those battalions, according to reliable witnesses.

UT these witnesses also reported that Angola is beginning to take over more of the training of its rapidly expanding army, which is thought to number about 65,000. And a trip with the Angolan Air Force to the war zone of the south confirmed that fully trained Angolan pilots are taking over more of the flying missions, although Cuban helicopter pilots remain an important part of anti-guerrilla.

"There is a confidence in the army that was not there before," said a trained observer, "It is the reason the government can pursue the diplomatic option with the United States as deeply as it has, and to propose to the South Africans that the Cubans will go if the South Africans will get out of the picture and cut off supplies to Mr. Savimbi's guerrillas.

Despite everything, the Portuguese are still the foreigners who matter here. And it is more than the fact that Portuguese is the national language that permits Angola's hundreds of linguistically different tribes to converse with each other. There are suggestions of other kinds that there is an acceptance of Portuguese culture here that goes deeper than colonial heritage in other parts of Africa.

For the poorest residents of this demoralized city, there are two classes of people. They either live "on the asphalt," and therefore are well to do, or "on the sand," in the shantytowns that have mushroomed across the sandy outskirts of the city since independence.

On a recent Sunday at The Island, 30,000
Angolans turned out for the first national party held since independence. Sponsored by the local radio station and a few of the surviving businesses, it offered unusual plenitude. Rival bands played pop songs, children danced beneath paim trees, a few drunks roamed the crowd and enormous quantities of beer were consumed.

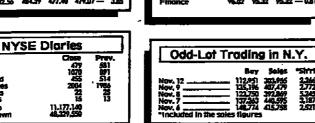

It was, in short, a boozy, sultry Sunday after-

NEW YORK — Jittery investors sent share prices on the New York Stock Exchange sharpy lower Tuesday, extending a slide that started last Wednesday.

Analysts said investors were concerned about the size of the federal budget deficit and pressures on corporate profits.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which gained 0.22 Monday, fell 12.59 to 1,206.60. Since hitting its highest level in 10 months last Tuesday, the day of the election, the Dow has lost 37.55 points. Every session has ended either lower or with indecisive results.

Monte Gordon of Drefyus Co. said where formerly the stock market went up when interest rates went down, there has been a "shift in emphasis to the more difficult environment for corporate earnings." He said investors are con-cerned that the low-inflation, slow-growth economy will increase competitive pressures and squeeze profit margins.

Mr. Gordon also cited concerns that the federal budget deficit may get larger due to declining tax revenues. "There is no indication the administration has any plan to deal with the problem," he said.

"With the volume anemic, it doesn't look like there is any heavy selling pressure on the down-side," said John Brooks of Shearson-Robinson Humphrey, Atlanta.

"There is not enough positive pressure to bring anybody off the sidelines," Mr. Brooks said, noting that many retail customers appear to have ample funds.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

Marketing Game Becomes Management-Training Tool

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ARIS — Marketing managers are sharpening their teeth with a high-tech marketing strategy game called MARK-STRAT. The brainchild of Jean-Claude Larreche, professor of marketing at INSEAD (Institut Européen d'Administration des Affaires), and Hubert Gatignon, assistant professor of marketing at the University of Pennsylvania, this simulation exercise has been used by business schools in the United States and Europe since the late "70s.

Recently redesigned for microcomputer use, and therefore easier to use, MARKSTRAT has now become a management training tool for several companies anxious to position their products more effectively and products more effectively and more aggressively. Users in-clude Digital Equipment, Eu-rope, a subsidiary of Digital Equipment Co. of the United States; Ciba-Geigy SA, the Swiss chemical company; Nestle SA, the Swiss foodprocessing company: Reckitt & Colman PLC, the British 14-hour days and the penalties are tough.

The game is played over five harrowing,

food and home-care-products company, and General Electric Co. of the United States.

"What people are finding is that competitors are no longer passive or reactive, they are getting anticipatory," said Mark Spelman, one of the seminar leaders and managing director of STRAT*X, the small French consulting concern set up to market MARKSTRAT and that specializes in strategic-management software and services. "Very often you could be all right if your competitors were passive or reactive. But it's a different ball game once they start anticipating each others' moves," he added.

he cost of a weekly seminar can reach $30,000, depending on the number of managers involved. At present, MARKSTRAT can only be "played" in seminars, but STRAT*X is developing software that would enable managers to play the game on their own personal computers.

But this is no simpleton's video same MARKSTRAT is a

But this is no simpleton's video game. MARKSTRAT is a complex and sophisticated strategic simulation exercise played over five harrowing, 14-hour days in which five teams each representing a company are pitted against each other.

The MARKSTRAT world is tough. Each company is given two brands to position in the market during an eight-year period. Among the many options available to them, teams can buy consumer market-research studies, spend on R&D to try to improve their product, invest in a new product, or advertise.

But there are no easy choices. Nor are there simple correlations in which, for instance, sales automatically rise when prices are cut. In the game, companies face budgetary constraints: It costs valuable time to get more money from headquarters. Your R&D department may refuse to develop the product you've asked for because it's unrealistic or too expensive. You have the option of burning the old product or selling it to a developing country. You are not going to be able to reposition your product — appeal to a wider segment of the market or to a different group of consumers -only through advertising because consumers will have already perceived the product in a certain way.

"If you try to reposition a Rolls-Royce, you're going to find it very hard to do anything significant with advertising," said Mr. Spelman. The car, he maintains, will always have a certain image with the public.

The companies face strong consumer unions. "Ralph Nader and his gang have been working very hard in the MARKSTRAT world," said Mr. Spelman, Mr. Nader is a U.S. consumer advocate. The companies also face bothersome governments that can impose price controls or come down on a team for breaking antitrust regulations.

Common mistakes by teams include going beserk at the beginning of the game and overspending, drastically cutting prices to try to gain market share or misreading the consumer and not repositioning their products properly. The penalty is fierce: The companies may go bust and they often do. But, in the MARK-STRAT world, the government will bail you out with loans. You can also play the game over and over again because there is no set formula to win. How your company does depends on the marketing strategies of the other four.

Quarterly Result Shows Sales Drop

By David A. Vise

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The growth of corporate profits slowed in the United States during third quarter as consumer demand flattened and imports surged, economists say.

Corporate profits in the third quarter were 9 percent ahead of the quarter last year, following year-to-year gains of 45 percent and 28 percent in the first and second quarters, according to a survey of 900 large corporations by Business

Sales in the quarter, about $700 billion, fell compared with the previous quarter for the first time in almost two years.

But economists did not find the news completely dismaying. The modest inflation rate means the quality of earnings in the quarter was good and that corporate cash flow remained strong. However, experts said that one factor that hurt profits was the inability of many corporations to pass along increased costs to con-sumers in the form of higher prices. This, they said, may continue to slow profit growth.

Many corporations were forced to discount merchandise to remain competitive, and as they cut prices more rapidly than they could reduce costs, profits were squeezed.

A surge in imports during the quarter, largely attributable to the strength of the dollar on foreignexchange markets, continued to threaten several basic industries, economists said. Economists said the brisk level of economic activity during the second half of 1983 made year-to-year profit increases more difficult for corporations, especially as the overall pace of the economic recovery moderates. Most economists expect small gains in profits to continue in this quarter and in 1985.

"The industries hardest hit by the increased competition from imports are the ones I worry about most, like steel, textiles, apparel, machinery and automobiles if the Japanese restraint on imports are significantly reduced," said Roger E. Brinner, chief economist at Data

Intelsat's Lonely Orbit Threatened By Space-Invading Competitors

By Reginald Stuart

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — On a hillside facing Connecticut Avenue a few miles from the White House, construction workers are building one of the most visually striking projects on the city's changing skyline. It is a $50-million headquarters for Intelsat, the organization of 108 governments that runs the only worldwide satellite communica-

The Intelsat project, an assemblage of 10 four-and five-story buildings of glass and steel woven together with cylinder-shaped glass stairwells, makes an optimistic architectural statement about technology and the future. But just as construction is approaching completion, Intelsat is facing financial uncertainties.

The same rapid advances of technology that combined with a trend toward deregulation to hasten the breakup of the Bell System, threaten to end Intelsat's 20-year near-monopoly on international satellite communications.

The organization, through a globe-encircling network of satellites and ground stations, carries 60 percent of all international telephone calls and nearly all intercontinental television transmissions. But now, four U.S.-based companies want to launch satellites to compete with Intelsat for trans-Atlantic business, the busiest segment of Intelsat's network. Two others want to carry traffic between North and South America.

Moreover, by 1988, Intelsat will face competition from a trans-Atlantic fiber-optic cable that will offer high-volume, low-cost telephone, data and video transmissions.

The Federal Communications Commission had delayed action on the applications from the private satellite companies pending a White House policy statement on direct competition with Intelsat. Now that the presidential election has returned Ronald Reagan for a second term, industry experts expect an affirmative answer. Mark S. Fowler, the FCC chairman, has indicated that he favors such competition.

Intelsat, however, argues that it would have to raise rates to offset loss of traffic and that the pain would be greatest for poor countries.

"Intelsat is marching the poor in front of them so they can sustain an unsustainable monopoly in face of this American process," said Thomas K. McKnight, president of Orion Satellite Corp., one of the six would-be competitors. There is never any merit for monopoly, particularly one that is controlled by foreigners. It only invites mischief," he added.

Citing the existence of regional government-run systems and proposals in Europe for private ventures, the Americans say the Intelsat monopoly already is a thing of the past. They say they are just trying to get into the game ahead of private satellite companies from other nations.

Mr. McKnight said that his company and others were not trying to run Intelsat out of business but were not trying to run Intelsat out of business but that there was plenty for everyone. "We just feel there are business customers who want alternatives and deserve them," he said.

This all comes as Intelsat is bracing itself for the competitive squeeze expected in mid-1988 when the eighth trans-Atlantic seabed cable between North America and Europe begins operating, vast-ly expanding communications opportunities beween the two continents.

The North Atlantic market currently accounts for 40 percent of Intelsat's traffic, or $180 million of projected 1984 revenues of $450 million.

TAT-8, as the proposed project is known, will be the first trans-Atlantic fiber-optic cable. It will be able to handle 37,000 voice, video and data transmissions simultaneously, four times more than the TAT-7 cable, which went into service in July 1983. The cable project is backed by a group of 29

Unilever Profit Increased 25% In 3d Quarter

By Lynne Curry International Heriki Tribune

LONDON - Unilever PLC and NV, the British-Dutch maker of detergents, foods and personal products, reported Tuesday that net rose 25 percent to £133 million ($167.5 million) from £106 million a year earlier.

Sales during the period, which ended Sept. 30, increased 10 percent to £3.7 billion from £3.37 bil-

Pretax profit in the quarter rose 8 percent to £233 million from £215 million a year earlier.

Nine-month net rose 21 percent to £359 million from £296 million in the corresponding period last year, on sales up 12 percent at £11.03 billion from £9.88 billion. On a pretax basis, nine-month profit rose 13 percent to £674 million from £596 million.

The results were slightly below market expectations. Shares of Un-ilever PLC, the British arm, closed on the London Stock Exchange at 10.60 pence a share, down 20 pence from Monday. Shares of Unilever NV, the Dutch arm, closed at 305

guilders on the Amsterdam Stock

Exchange, up slightly from the opening price of 304 guilders.
Unilever said its profits in North America declined because of new product investment in its subsidiary, Lever Brothers, and difficult conditions in the tea market.

The profits of another subsidiary. National Starch, also lost mo-mentum as the recovery of the U.S. economy slowed, according to David Lang, an analyst Henderson Crosthwaite & Co., a London stockbrokerage. In Europe, the company posted lower results in edible fat and ice cream operations. Analysts said bad weather affected ice cream sales, while the downturn in edible oil and margarine was sharper than expected because of competition.

Unilever said its animal-feed companies had been adversely affected by European Community measures to reduce milk produc

Analysis noted that detergent sales were generally flat and faced a tough time in Britain and West Germany, although there was improvement in Italy and France.

Fannie Mae to Try to Raise $2 Billion a Year in Europe

LONDON - The Federal National Mortgage Association plans to raise as much as $2 billion a year in the Euromarket, the agency's chairman, David Maxwell, said Tuesday. He said the agency would tap the market about four times a

Despite some resistance to the initial offering of $300 million in seven-year notes last week, Mr. Maxwell said the association, commonly known as Fannie Mae, was pleased with the outcome of the sale. He said the sale cost it about 18 basis points less than a comparable sale in the United States. (A basis point is one hundredths of Mr. Maxwell also said he was optimistic that the U.S. Treasury would relax the regulations covering these sales to attract more indiridual buyers of the paper.

Speaking at a press conference, Mr. Maxwell said the absence of participation among individual investors in the sale was disappointing, but that institutional interest

Other members could accuse the United States systems to serve only heavily used of violating the Intelsat treaty that provides that no member nation shall start or allow the operation of separate satellite systems that would cause technical or economic harm to Intelsat.

Intelsat's other signatories have already adopted a resolution questioning the propriety of the United States allowing the competition. Twenty-three member nations have written the State Department and 47 have written the FCC expressing their concern about the satellite competition proposals.

Intelsat's opposition to competition is supported by its U.S. member, Communications Satellite Corp., or Comsat. Industry observers say Comsat seeks to protect its own role as the principal broker between Intelsat and U.S. comminnications companies seeking to send satellite transmissions abroad. "The competition is inevitable," said Henry Geller, director of the Washington Center for Public Policy Research and a former head of the National Telecommunications Information Center during the administration of President Jimmy Carter. "The problem is working it out in a way that's compatible with our commitments to Intelsat."

STRONG MEDICINE

By Arthur Hailey. 448 pp. $16.95 Doubleday, 245 Park Ave., New York, N.Y. 10167.

Reviewed by Sandy Rovner

ARTHUR HAILEY's "Strong Medicine" is the putative inside story of the pharmaceutical industry. "revealing," proclaims its advance publicity, "the machinations of a business where millions of dollars and millions of lives hang on every decision."

Unabashedly, Hailey tells us in his preface that the book's heroine is at least reminiscent of his wife, which makes it perhaps a bit outre to suggest that the protagonist of "Strong Medicine," Celia Jordan, may be a little too good to be true. She is attractive, of course -what Hailey heroine isn't? — but also brilliant, intuitive, innovative, sensitive, loyal, feminine and witty. She is conscious to the point of ennui of her singularity as a loophole lady in an elligible description. all-male domain. But she is, Hailey is quick to tell us, no feminist.

Celia Jordan is worshiped and adored by most everyone in the novel, except the "bad gnys," who are instantly identifiable by their perverted response to her charms. But to those gentle readers who meet her along the way, she is a crashing bore.

Nothing that goes wrong with the drug com-pany she eventually heads is ever her fault —or the fault of the system. It is paragon Celia who prevents Fielding-Roth — her company — from jumping on the Thalidomide bandwagon, but she isn't so lucky in keeping the company's own anti-morning sickness drug off the market a decade and a half later. Not her fault, of course, but that of an embittered and mostly failed research director who blackmails an alcoholic FDA official.

Celia meets her husband when, as a neophyte in the business, she manages to lay her ands on an unapproved, experimental drug that she sees at once will save the life of an otherwise doomed patient of this terribly attractive physician. It is the terribly attractive physician whom she marries, and they live happily ever after, more or less, despite everything else that goes on.

At one point along the way the perfect Celia suddenly hops into bed with a scientist she discovered in England who has set out to find a cure for Alzheimer's disease, with which his mother is afflicted. This one-night stand is designed, I suppose, to show us that dear Celia is human, but it is jarringly out of character.

There is precious little real action in this latest Hailey potboiler. Indeed the pot never gets much past simmer. Celia's own character is too pure to be burdened by much conflict in her personal life.

Oh sure, the company official — her mentor, who won't listen to her concerns about the anti-morning sickness drug — kills himself after his daughter gives birth to a grandchild brain-damaged by the drug, but that was predictable, and the character was so one-dimensional that you really don't care.

And oh yes, there is a sadistic research scientist who less the laboratory mice suffer.

and British animal rights people are depicted as mindless vandals, but that all takes about three pages.

The wicked scientist's life's work turns out to be a dud, whereas the good scientist (the one who beds Celia) marries a humane lab assign tant, lives happily ever after and discovers peptide that not only cures Alzheimer's, but is also both a safe weight-loss drug and a power ful aphrodisiac.

Now that might be strong medicine. "Strong ledicine," however, isn't.

Sandy Rovner writes a column for The Wash ington Past's Health section.

ON the diagramed deal, there are several possible reasons for raising partner's major suit to the five level: a est to bid a slam with control of the opponent's suit; a slam invitation focusing on the quality of the trump suit; or an advance save, made in the belief that the opponents can make a high-level contract.

The last of these was in the mind of North when he jumped to five hearts over the Michaels cue bid, which showed length in spades and a minor suit

South was not sure about his partner's intentions. He should perhaps have been warned by partner's intentions. He should perhaps have been warned by the favorable vulnerability, but he continued to slam. And spreading some confusion in his turn, he bid six diamonds rather than six hearts.

Club acc: When the king fell, he breathed a sigh of relief and claimed the slam. He announced correctly that he would play clubs, eventually developing two club winners for diamond discards.

When North corrected to six hearts, expecting to be doubled, the bidding ended and West had to lead. In hockey, unlike most other sports, the last decade has seen eams dominate for years at a time. The last time a team won the Stanley Cup just once was Montreal in 1972-73, ending a span of four years in which they and Boston took turns winning. After that, the Flyers won twice, Montreal four times and the Islanders four times. "I'm a big believer that hockey is the purest context. It took Philadelphia several years, and then they won it twice, and the Islanders threatened a few times before they won it. Now it's the Oilers' turn. They're a team, and they're young enough to sustain it."

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — One of the many delightful things we do in New York is eat cuisine. I recommend it to everybody.

When I first moved here I still ate food, even though people all around me were eating cuisine. In this I was trying to remain loyal to my roots back home, where my folks had eaten food for genera-

When I told them I was moving to New York, they took it hard. "I guess when you come back you won't be eating food any more." Aunt Phyllis said. "You'll be eating that there cuisine."

"Don't you believe it. Aunt Phyllis." I said. "You can take a boy out of the country, but you can't make him eat cuisine.

"Don't go up there talking like a hick." Aunt Phyllis said. "If you must spout clichés, at least get them right. That one goes, You can take a gentleman out of the country, but you can't take the country out of a gentleman."

Anyhow, I came to New York predisposed against cuisine. People would phone and say, "Will you come to dinner?" and I would say, "What are you going to serve?" and they'd say, "Just a little perfectly exquisite cuisine," and I'd say, Thanks, but I've got something to do that night."

Naturally, I couldn't hold out forever. One night the people downstairs invited me in and served something I just couldn't get enough of. "What is this stuff?" I

"Braised capers," came the answer, "That's what we call cuisine." I was hooked. If that was what cuisine tasted like, the folks back home could have their food, Before long I was just as excited about new cuisine developments as the mosthardened New Yorker.

'Stranger Than Paradise': Offbeat America

Washington Post Service
NEW YORK — There is no experience in the movies like the collective discovery of a funny, luminously real and utterly original new film by an anonymous young talent. A film like Jim Jarmusch's "Stranger Than Paradise."

Jarmusch recently entered the most important week of his life. The response to his film's pre-miere at the New York Film Festival would determine whether he would be mentioned in the same breath as Cinematic Biggies or whether he would be just another poseur relegated to the East Village dumpster.

It was a week that would decide whether he would be able to work as a filmmaker full time, or whether he would go back to being a process server, poster hang-er, free-lance film editor and usher at the St. Mark's Theater.

Jarmusch stood in the hallway of a cable television studio with John Lurie, one of the stars of the film, waiting to be interviewed for a program called "The New Tomorrow's Television Tonight." Jarmusch blends into the scene as much as a 31-year-old man with completely white hair can blend in Tall and gaunt, he wears only black: black shirt, black trousers, black sneakers, black cotton sweater.

"I only know two people who even have cable TV," Jarmusch says, watching the monitor.
"I did 30 interviews in Cannes alone," he says, "And 10 around Europe, And 10 here. So 50. It's really starting to depress me. Especially when they say, 'What's your next project?' It's like, 'Shut up. It's none of your business. What's your next interview?"

It's Jarmusch's turn in the studio. The camera starts to roll. The interviewer predicts "Stranger" will be "an offbeat hit." "Now the movie's very stylistically inventive," he says. "It's in black and white. . ." Lurie and Jarmusch seem bored. A clip from the movie shows a funny, deadpan colloquy about TV dinners between a Hungarian girl and a down-andout New York hustler.

The two men leave the studio: followed by the interviewer. He suggests to Jarmusch that his film

"It's supposed to be anti-New Wave," Jarmusch demurs. "But it came across as New Wave," the interviewer insists. "We failed!" Jarmusch says, laughing. Jarmusch lives on Prince Street in the East Village. One Tuesday, a pony-tailed reporter from Heavy Metal magazine scales the four flights to his apartment.

Jarmusch's girlfriend and a fel-low New York University Film School product, Sara Driver, the producer of "Stranger Than Paradise," is on the phone. At the last minute, they have had to obtain rights to Screamin' Jay Haw-kins' "I Put a Spell on You," and the five-figure sum, in the context of "Stranger's" low budget - a little over $100,000 - has given everyone a little last-minute acid

The apartment is as spare as the film. The Heavy Metal reporter sits on an automobile seat perched on a steel crate while Jarmusch, squats on the edge of a rocking chair.

The interviewer asks about the unique style of the film: each scene is composed of a single shot (there is no editing within the scene), and the screen blacks out between scenes (like Samuel Beckett, whose mood pervades "Stranger Than Paradise," Jarmusch does as much with nothing as he does with something). "I think the black spaces really are a contradiction," Jarmusch says. "Formally they form a separation."

"Unnnnhmmmm," says Heavy

"But as the film progresses, they become interconnected instead of separated." "Right." Jarmusch had his unhappy childhood in Akron, Ohio, where his father worked for Goodyear and his mother, before her marriage, was the film critic for the Akron Beacon-Journal, "Everyone I knew in Akron wanted to leave," Jarmusch remembers. Jarmusch left for Northwestern's journalism school, but something about the formulas of news writing rankled him, and after a semester he was at Columbia, studying literature. Four years later he went downtown to New York University. He surfed in the swirling tides of New Wave rock 'n' roll, playing with a band called the Del-By-

"At that time everyone in New York had a band," Jarmusch recalls. "The idea was that you didn't have to be a virtuoso musician to have a band. The spirit was more important than having technical expertise, and that influenced a lot of filmmakers." Jarmusch's other big influence at the time was the director Nicholas Ray ("Rebel Without a Cause"); Jarmusch became his assistant, "He said, 'If you want to make a film, you can make a film. Don't let anyone tell you it's impossible or that you have to have so much money.

"Stranger Than Paradise" is about a Hungarian girl who has come to the United States and ends up spending time with her cousin Willie, a two-bit grifter. It is as peculiarly American as "The Honeymooners," but it is shot in an ingenious style that Jarmusch says draws on such sources as the Japanese director Yasujiro Ozu, Italian neo-realism, the French Nouvelle Vague, the new German cinema, American B movies and horror flicks.

"I'm an American," Jarmusch says. "And while I feel that my film formally is very un-American, it's about America, and the characters are very American. I think that's sort of what 'Stranger Than Paradise' is about, that America is different than other places and there are different ways of thinking about America. I hope this film is a sort of bridge between being American but also having influences, especially formally, from world cinema, non-American cinema."

"Stranger" opened to spirited acclaim at Cannes: the audience applauded in the middle of the screening, and it won the Camera d'Or prize for best first feature

view. It begins:
"Jim Jarmusch's 'Stranger
Than Paradise' looks as if it had been left on the windowsill too long... its images appear to have been aged by the sun and by general neglect until they've faded into a uniform shade of gray."

Jarmusch is depressed. He doesn't seem to realize that Canby has gone on to say this is "one of the most original, wonderfully oddball, independent American films to turn up ... in years." Or that such a blurb ensures success.
